Throughout history, people have been affected by wars and political conflicts. In fact, wars have caused people to leave their homes and even their own countries and forced them to become refugees. Of course, being a refugee is a difficult experience.

This can be seen clearly in the world’s latest refugee crisis, which is affecting millions of people escaping the violence and war in Syria. Not only do these families with young children have to survive the fighting in Syria, but they also have to make dangerous journies to European countries. Some died as they make their way to Europe in broken boats, which might sink to the bottom of the sea. Others have been denied entry by some countries. A few have also been mistreated by European authorities.

Being a refugee can be particularly difficult for children, who may not understand why they have to leave their homes. Many have seen terrible things in the wars. Even after they reach a new country, they are often isolated in refugee camps. It is no wonder that many of them suffer from mental problems.

Their mental problems often continue after they have settled in a new country. Even though they are grateful to be welcomed in a new country, they often have trouble adjusting to life there. Without a doubt, being a refugee is never easy. This is particularly true for child refugees, who have suffered so much at such a young age. We can only hope that child refugees can be treated with love and care in their new homes.

To end their miseries, refugees have to resettle. However, there is a lot of limitation.

Among the 240,000 refugees that are registered in Syria for the past six years, only 22,000 have resettled in a third country.

By far, the country that has accepted the largest number of Iraqi refugees is the United States.

Country	Percentage
America	70%
Canada	10%
Germany	9%
Australia	4%

(Chart based on UNHCR data as of October 2010)

I was extremely depressed during the first three years here in Syria. It seemed like I lost all my hope and my dreams.

At those moments of hopelessness, some strength came to me out of nowhere. I began thinking that maybe there would be a way out. Even if I could never go to college, I could take free courses such as English, French, or even designing.

I thought learning could help me go somewhere. Even if I couldn't build a career, I could make myself a better me and I could have more chances. Not all Iraqi people think like I do, but this is my belief.

I think I can go to a lot of places, anywhere but America. My daughter and son are already there, and their lives are destroyed by Americans.
