Nowadays, everyone is talking about refugees around the world. Some people have negative opinions of them. Some are either indifferent or unkind to these newcomers. But luckily, not everyone treats refugees badly. There are many projects that aim to improve their living conditions. Some NGOs try to provide housing for them; others try to find clothing and supplies to meet their basic needs. Among these projects, there is a special one called “The School Bus Project,” intending to provide refugees with education.

Since 2015, The School Bus Project has been providing it for refugees. But in most circumstances, going to school is hard. Some can't get registered because they don't have the right documents. Others are in remote refugee camps. Many adults don't have access to school because they can't afford the tuition fees. That's why the School Bus Project has built 10 mobile schools. The organization states that education is a human right and that they want to ensure that everyone can receive it.

The School Bus Project says that refugees are here to stay. Instead of waiting for them to leave, the members of this project believe that they can help them become educated and play an important part in the community. The project is open to both children and adults. Anyone is allowed to join and starts learning new life skills.

If more refugees are educated, they may achieve their full potential, and bring lifelong benefits to their new community. Education can change not only the fate of a single person, but an entire society.
